ALONE.

I feel alone in crowded street. Mid all the rash and roar,

The stranger I may idly meet, I care to see no more! There's nothing hea world outside

The longings fell to day, Thave no heart in all its pride. It tickes no grief away.

Sometimes a vision rises there, (Shuls out the surging throng,) A green hillside, a log-house dear, A brook that sings a song!

I seem to see a sunny slope, Stretching toward the west, I cidl it then my hill of hope,

It beckons me to rest. Yes, all alone in crowded street, With trending life around,

The iragedy of lave or hate Too often here are found. So long I for another scene, The future cunnot bring,

A home mon a billside green. And hear the old brook sing. nisville, Ky. March 20th '81.

THE CRAZY QUILT CRAZE.

What a Lot of Men Have to say on the Subject.

Milwankee Sau.

A number of gentlemen sat In the PlankInten House reading-room the other evening when a gentleman came In apparently very much agitated, "What's the matter?" asked an acquaintance. "Matter? Well, I should say there was matter enough. I don t expect to leave Milwankee with & whole snit of clothes. In fact everything I've got on begins to look like the remnants of an antiquated porons plaster. Never had experience with a lot of ladies who have got an attack of crazy bed quift? Of course not. t might have known better than to have asked, as it never strikes any but good looking old bachelors like myself. When a man has been there once he is satisfied, unless he is a ling. The reason they call these new fangled quilts crazy, is because everybody for twelve miles around a house where one of 'em 's started Is set erazy by the lady demanding a piece of

"To-night I thought I'd go out to ee some ladies. Old friends I hadn't more than got into the door, before one of them, with a pair of scissors in her hand, snatched my hat and made a dive for the lining. She got left. She hamled the left back with Campbell & Medley a disappointed look, as she realized that somebody had got in their work ahead of her. Why do I keep my cont buttoned up to my chin? Well. when she found the thing of the hat mestic implements, the "sewing magone she made a dive for my neck clame." seart. There's nothing left but the about the size of a ten cents piece." The man-who-had been there then > haven't carved my blower. They even raided the sleeve lining to my overcoat. In fact I haven't a whole garment on me. I am crazy so they'll have a crazy quilt sure. Why, they get the lining out of every hat they can lay hands onto. It isn't safe to leave your hat in the hall, if you expect to get it again in as sound condition as when you hung it on the rack. A man who has had any experience feels like taking to the woods every time he sees a lady coming, especially if she looks smiling. "It's not so rough on a man to take his hat lining, but if ever high-buttoned vests go out of style, nine-tenths of the young men will have their reputation for sobriety and peacefulness Livery Feed & Sale Stable. ruined all on account of the dilapidated condition of their neckties, so many samples being cut out of them by the ladies for these crazy quilts. Why, they will cut the lining out of a claw-hammer coat.

> It's a mighty good thing that bridesmaids go into church thist or the groom's coat-talls would look a ragged signal of distress. There wouldn't be enough of the lining left by the time he reached the alfar to make the talls of his coat hang in any sort of shape." And the much-sampled man usked for the key of his room and went to bed a dream how "perfectly lovely" his contributions of silk looked in a crazy quilt.

ALMOST A HOMICIDE.

Dr. Ben. S. Wood Stabbed to the Hollow.

in Dr. Ben. S. Wood's being serious ly stabbed by a negro named John Thomas Broady.

Broady had been employed by Dr Wood to lead his fine horse, Mamlarino Forrest, around the streets, on Monday, for which he was to be jaid ten cents an hour. On Monday night Broady called to see Dr. Wood, Int he was absent, and so he returned the next marning. He went to his stable, where he found Philander Coleman, Dr. Wood's hostler, who told him that Dr. Wood had left twenty-tive cents with Bim for lain, (Broady). Broady said it was not rnough, and refused to accept the quarter.

At this stage, Dr. Wood himself entered the stable, and, according to Coleman's statement, inquired what was the matter. Broady said twentyfive cents was not enough, and depald him remarking that he wanted no further transactions gange. with him. Broady retorted that he (Wood) never paid anybody enough for working for hlm. Wood replied that he always paid what he promised, and ordered Broady to get off hls premises, at the same time applying an opprobious epithet to him. Broady went out and spoke back in an insulting manner, and Dr. Wood went out ofter him and threw a brick-bat at hlm. Broady dodged the brick and turning on Wood, with a knife, cut him in the chest and stubbed him in the abdomen. The account of the affair after Dr. Wood got outside of the stude is based mon the testimony of Harry Downer, a colored boy, who was the only witness besides Coleman.

The ent in the chest was only slight, as the kulfe struck a rib and did not penetrate. The wound in the bowels went to the hollow, and was at first thought by Dr. Fairleigh, the attending physician, to be total.

Dr. Wood suffered intensely al day Tuesday and a part of Wednesday, but by Thursday morning he was resting easier, and is now out of danger, with favorable circumstances.

Broady was tried before Judge Winfree, Tuesday afternoon, and 'upon the testimony of Coleman and Downer, was held under a bail of $500 tlH the 19th inst., to await the result of Dr. Wood's injuries. Broady, his father and sister, whose combined property is valued at $1, 500, were accepted on the bond.

Dr. Wood Is a prominent and use ful cltizen, and has a host of friends who earnestly lope for his speedy recovery. He is probably forty or more years of age. Broady is about & Stites to defend him.

A DROLL ADVENTURE.

We had started at sunrise one morning, with a pair of oxen and a cart, to go to Woodstock, to market. In the cari were two shotes and twenty-seven turkeys, which had been killed and dressed the night before.

It was early in November, and I recollect that the ruts in the read were frozen, and that the ice was so thick on the puddles in the read that it would almost hear the oxen.

I was a boy then, and lived in the "blue-nose" country, as the Province el New Brunswick is semetimes called.

We had quite a large farm, thengh it was some distance hack in the woods, and raised large numbers of cattle, pigs and peultry. Father worked at lumbering in the winters, and at the time I am speaking of had already gone up the Tobique, to huild a "camp" for a gang of choppers who were to begin work the 20th of the month. So my brother Ransom aud I had the winter's wood to cut, and the marketing to do.

It was sixteen miles frem our place to Woodstock, and fer the first three miles there was only a cart-read. We had heard that there was to be a shootingmatch at Woodstock that day. Geese were to he fired at, at 6d a shot. The distance was only fifteen rods, for any sort of gnns that competitors might bring.

Ranse and I, of conrse, took our guns. and Joe Ethridge, a neighbor frem over the river, went with us. If we should get to town in time, we meant to try few shots at the geese.

We had goue a mile or mere, and were passing through a second growth of white birches and some thick clumps of hemlock that were en each side of the road, when Ranse and I heard the sharp squeak of a hedgehog, such as the animal often makes in November mornings.

Joo, who was walking a little ahead of the cart, on the lookeut for partridges, cried, "Just look at the 'quill-pigs' over there acress the hellew !"

There was a valley on the west side of the road. Acress it, en the mountainside, twenty-five or thirty rods off, the poplars grew thick and tall. The leaves had dropped from their branches, and in the tops of the peplars we saw four hedgehogs gnawing at the bark.

The sun had just risen, and shene upon them so that we could see the animals very plainly.

"They're fut now," said Joe. "They're as good as geese. Let's git em, and take 'em along in the cart."

We did uet dare to leave the team in tho read, for our eattle were a yeke of "sparked" 4-year-old steers, not very well broken. Turning them partly round to a tree, Ranse chained them to it, with a spare ox-chain that was in the cart, through the staple of the yoke. That done, we took our guns ent of the cart and ran after Joe, across the hollow. He had fired at the hedgehogs hefore we reached him, and had brought down one great fellow. The others were in plain sight in the bare poplar Rause and I soon had two mere lying at our feet in the dry leaves. But the last one, which Joe now shot, lodged as it fell in the crotch of a limb, where it clung, being still alive.

Just theu we heard a tremendous noise, that came from the place where we had hitched the steers. The chain was rattling, and we could hear the cattle thrashing the yoke against the tree.

"They're breakin' away !" exclaimed

Ranse, and he shouted, "Wnoa-nusn Whea-hush l"

But the noise increased, and we heard one of the steers anddenly bawl ont. making a queer guttural sound.

"Something's biting 'em'l" cried Joo. We each of us canglit up a hedgehog hy the hind legs, and, without stopping fer the one in the tree, ran toward the cart as fast as we could.

The steers breke loose and were wheeling round to run for home with the cart, as we came up through the white birches and caught sight of them. "What's that in the cart?" panted

Through the trees I could see something that looked black, as the steers darted away.

We dashed into the road, but were too late to head them off. They had ten or a dozen rods the start, and were geing as fast as they could leap. The cart was humping and rumbling ever the frozen ruts, and in it was a block creature that looked as large as a yearling steer. The animal was staggering in his endeavor to keep on his feet as the cart jounced along, and he turned round constantly in making attempts to jump out. "It's a bear !" Joo sheuted. "There's a hear in the cart !" We ran en after the cart as nimhly as we could. There was quite a leng hill to go up; but the cattle got further from us at every leap. I never saw steers run so.

"Must-er-smelt-er-ther-meater—the—turkeys l" panted Joe. "An" steers-was scairt!"

Steers and bear got to the top of the hill a long way ahead of us, and then rope and jerked it tight. The bear the cart went rumbling down on the reared up on the beam and clawed at Friday, Bish q McClo-key received other side.

When we reached the top they were sandy llat below us, and the bear was his nails, and then get his fere paws still iu the eart.

"They'll haul him heme!" exclaimed Ranse.

It seemed curions that the animal did net spring out hnt we could see him lurching from side to side and turning round, apparently afraid to jump

Our house and barn were in plain could drive the sheep in toward night. She could shut the harn door, but could net epen it.

She and little "Sile" were standing near the well sweep when we reached the top of the hill. They soon heard the cart coming. We saw them turn and look a mement, then they both ran into the house, and in a second mother came to the door.

The steers turned into the yard at full run. One wheel of the cart bumped ever a big stone and struck against a home. post that held the hars, breaking it with a crash that we heard away back where we were coming down the hill.

But the bear still clung to the cart, and when mether saw it and its ecenpant tearing through the yard she ran into the heuse and shnt the door.

The steers, in their blind fright, dashed on toward the barn, going over a pile of stove-wood, smashing the saw-herse, and knocking off the well-curh.

The barnyard gate was epen. Rushing into it, they breke with the nigh wheel one of the gate-posts short eff at the ground.

We took the shertest cnt acress the field, but as I jumped the fence I saw steers and eart go with the speed of a locomotive into the barn at the great door. They knocked down or jarred down the prop against the door, and it slammed to after them.

"New we've got 'um !" exclaimed Ranse: "they're all in there together !" In a pen at the farther end of the baru floor was au old heg with a litter of ten little pigs, and in another temporary pen, in the cattle "tie-up," were two other hogs, which we were going to kill in a day or two.

The rest of our turkeys, thirty or mere, were shut up in one of the empty bins of the "hay-bay."

We rushed to the barn. I never, in all my life, heard such a ueise as there was inside | Beards were being smashed. The old hogs were harking like wild boars, and one of the little pigs was going reck-ek-ok-ok-ok; the turkeys were ull flying and fluttering and "quitting" and "yeaping."

Mother and Thenty had veutured ont, pale as ghests, wanting to know what, for mercy's sake," was the matter. "Matter enough, I should think!"

"Well, we must go in and get 'cm part, semelew l" exclaimed Ranse, ex-He got an ax, and I pulled open the small door of the "tie-up." I had no seoner got it half open when out ran oue of the fatted hogs, followed by one of the pigs. A turkey came flying out ever their hacks. There was such a dust that we actually couldn't see into the harn.

"Shut it up I" cried Joe, "or the bear'll he out in our faces l"

Theu he and Ranse got their guns ready, and I threw open the great door. All the turkeys came out at once.

As soon as we could see through the dust, we found that one of the steers was uuyoked. He had broken through the partition into the turkey-bay. The other steer was threshing about over the eart tongue, and had knocked down both the pig pens. The little pigs were rushing this way and that, under the eart and all over the harn.

But we could not see the bear anywhere, We had supposed that he would rush ont. Ranse and Joe had their guus cocked, and I was ready for him with the ax. "Den't s'pose he's got out, do ye?"

exclaimed Joe.

We ventured into the harn a little, and, happening to look up to the roof, I saw his black hide away up on one of the "great heams," where he had elimbed to get out of the scrimmage. There were the marks of his nails on ene of the posts. When he saw we were looking at him, he sang out at ns lustily, and then growled his very savagest. "I'll fix him |" muttered Joe, taking shouted Ranse. "It wen't do. You'll have the barn all in a blaze!"

And indeed he would, for everything inside was as dry as tinder. There was hay on oue side and straw on the other, mowed up almost to the beams the bear was on.

Then we stoned him, and threw sticks of firewood at him. But the creature liugged the beam desperately. There had been such a racket that he was actnally terrified.

Finding there was no probability of his coming down voluntarily, we drove the steers out of the barn and shut up the pigs.

"New, old fellew, you must take it!" exclaimed Joo. He took a long pole off the fence, and began to punch the bear, Ranse and I standing ready to shoot him if he jumped off the beam and came ent of the barn. But he wouldn't leave his beam Back and forth he sku'ked frem one end of it to the other, growling and tearing at Joe's pole.

He was a big old fellow, but he did not seem to have much fight in him. At length we got so we were not at all afraid of our game. Joe declared he would have him off that beam if he had to go up and push him off.

Ranse rau and got the elothes line We made a slip noose at one end of it. Joe then set the long ladder against the beam, and, while Rause pushed the bear on the other side with the pole, he -got-in-the cart. No wender-the climbed part way up the ladder and flung the noose over the animal's head. I had hold of the other end of the

We concluded that the bear had been near the road where we left the steersin one of the hemlock clumps, perhaps happiest and most victorious evert -and that the smell of the fresh meat had led him to climb into the cart to help himself.

WHO WERE THE MOUND-BUILDERS? Dr. W. De Haas, after a careful examination of the supposed connection between the "mound-builders" and the Hurst, a substantial farmer of Polk ancient races of Mexico, has come to the conclusion that it does not exist. He considers that the former people were man, of the Cedartown Advertiser but little advanced beyond the modern Dr. F. M. Liddell and several other Indians, but that they were different, In the discussion that followed the reading of Dr. De Haas' paper in the American Association, Judge Henderson objected to the term "mound-builder," as one that conveyed a false idea. There is no evidence, he said, which will justify ns in separating the ancient and mere modern races, net a single feature peculiar to the so-called mound-builders. The speaker had started out in the study of American archeology with the impression that these people were distinct and separate from the Indians, but he had been compelled by the force of facts to relinquish the theory. It was improper to talk about these people as mysterious, for they were no more mysterious than the Shawnees, the Natchez, the Tensas and other tribes. The cloth found in their works was like that made by every tribe from the lakes to the gulf, even less fine than some, and their pottery was no better. In short, the speaker said, in his opinion the mound-builders were the ancestors of the Indians, -Popular Science Monthly.

SHAVING IN OLD TIMES. Shaving, in the olden days, was a lengthy operation, and English barbers devised various methods of amusing their customers while awaiting their turn. They generally provided some musical instrument, such as a guitar or a zither. In old pietures the shaving basin fitted iuto the chin; until a receut period barbers were wont to bleed a patient and even extract teeth. In London the familiar burber's pole, with its red spiral coil of color, is a reminiscence of the staff the surgeon gave his customers to grasp while he was being bled. The tapo or handago was twisted round the pole, which when not in use was placed entside the door. This staff was by order left eutside a surgeeu's door, as s sign of his profession, and for conveuence the painted pole was substituted s a sign, and the right to use it was extended to barbers about the year 1790, Mr. Geo. is greatly excited over the monitestations of Miss Lulu Hurst, the fifteenyear-old daughter of Mr. Wig. E. MEACHAM & WILGUS. county. The stories told are of such a strange character that Col. Freeprominent citizens went out to Mr. Hurst's residence for the purpose of investigating them. They found the young lady to be the picture of health and of modest manners. Upour reguest to develop some of her newly developed powers, she arosa and placed her hands upon the back of a common chair. The doctor was remested to hold the chair. He was maide to do so alone, and two, and then ture men tried, with no better effect. Apparently there was not a particle of playsical force used by the roung lady, her hands merely restng carelessly on the back of the chair. On the previous accasing three of the stonnest men in the neighborhood had found it impossible to hold the chair. A large, old l'ashioned bed-stead stood with it head back in the corner of the roun On the foot of the bed Miss Lula placed her bands lightly, and the bed rose two feet in the air and noved swiftly around the room. Miss Lorn Wimberly, a consin of Miss Lula, while in bed recently heard a thumping on the head board. which she thought was produced by her cousin with her fingers, and remested her to stop and go to sleep. Miss Lalu protested innocence, year the sound grew more amlible. A playful remark that it should strike her caused a sensation like a slight shock to be felt by Miss Wimberly about the face. The sound was then caffed to manifest itself where commanded about the bed, and the bed was finally commanded to move, and to the wonder of the occupants, it rolled briskly around the room. This is the circumstance that led to the subsequent experiment. On a recent occasion, while Miss Lula was lying across the bal, she thought of some favorite air, when its name emanated drangely from the headloard of the bed, and was heard by more than a half dozen persons sitting around the room. On another occasion un nuele, above the ordinary weight, sat in a chair, his feet on the rounds,
